Parents With Children In Therapy Are Thrilled With The Progress They See

When therapy is painful or difficult, getting a child to actively participate can be very frustrating for a parent. That is why parents are thrilled when their child's therapist incorporates a Power Pumper into their session. The pain and difficulty seem to vanish. The Power Pumper has been a major factor in changing children's attitude toward therapy. Why? From the child's perspective it all starts with the look of the Power Pumper. They like the fact that it looks "cool", unlike the other mobility devices in therapy that are developed for special needs children. As they ride it, they find the Power Pumper is easy to operate and fun to use! Many parents like it because it is a safe activity. The low center of gravity provides a feeling of security for their child. They also like the fact that it promotes movement of both upper and lower extremities. Parents who have children with severe special needs find that even their child is able to use the Power Pumper. Parents who use a Power Pumper for their children are thrilled with the results. Instead of dealing with the frustration of getting children to do their therapy and exercises, parents and therapists have said that it is difficult to get them to stop because they enjoy their time on the Power Pumper so much.
